Melissa Klein

Melissa Klein lives in San Francisco, where she writes and illustrates the fiction zine Inklings, performs short plays and monologues, and works with her punk community to create humorous political street theater. She recently co-edited, with Sara Jaffe, the audiozine Long Ago and Right Now, a compilation of songs and stories about San Francisco. Melissa's new book, Looking and Other Stories, is a collaboration with artist Sara Thustra. It includes work from her zines as well as stories that have appeared in Punk Planet, the anthology It's All Good (Manic D Press) and elsewhere. She will be reading from this book, with pictures projected for your multisensory enjoyment.

Jennifer Whiteford

Jennifer Whiteford teaches, writes, and goes to rock shows in Ottawa, Ontario. Her six year old perzine, Matilda, has won rave reviews and spawned her online journal Matilda Says. Last year, she released The Mattie Stories, a collection of short fiction that one reviewer called "the Vinyl Cafe for indie rockers". Up until very recently, Jennifer played guitar and sang with the all-girl all-rock Ottawa band Sophomore Level Psychology. Her first novel, Grrrl, is currently in publishing purgatory, but she will read excerpts from it on tour anyway. Watch out, she'll be using her "teenage voice".

Josh MacPhee

Josh MacPhee is an artist and activist based in Chicago, IL whose work often revolves around themes of radical politics and public space. He published his first book, Stencil Pirates: A Global Survey of Street Stenciling (Soft Skull Press). When not destroying his lungs with spray paint or getting sticky with wheatpaste, he organizes the Celebrate People's History Poster Series and works with larger groups of artists to create giant collective cultural events such as the Department of Space and Land Reclamation and the Autonomous Territories of Chicago. Josh will be sharing a slide show history of street stenciling and discussion of expression in public space.
